

The weather was perfect at the Hershey Invitational golf tournament Monday, Sept. 28 and the girls took advantage by setting new personal lows, each lowering her previous best by several strokes.

“I have never had every member of a team do that on the same day,” said a very pleased golf coach Troy Kemling. “Needless to say, our team score was the lowest of the year.”

Seniors Emily Kiolbasa and Steph Reichert led the way, Emily placing in the top ten, and Steph not far behind.

“They both played very steady golf today except for one hole that got away from Steph,” said Kemling. “She would have finished right with Emily if not for that. Still I was impressed with the way that Steph bounced back after that poor hole with a par on the next. I don’t think she would have been able to let it go that quickly in the past,” he added.

The freshmen are making dramatic swings of improvement. Shania Stickley’s play was most improved by scoring two rounds in the low 60’s when she had never previously broken 70. Carra Johnson and Capri Meyer each had one better nine and showed that even lower scores are possible.

"I was proud of each of the ladies. They showed more focus today than any other meet thus far," said Kemling.
