

Students at Perkins County Elementary and several staff members each contributed a section to the python that is now hanging in the great hallway at Perkins County Elementary.

Each class studied a different art lesson, including dots, mosaics, animal patterns, op art, molas and tessellations, then interpreted their unique version for a section of the python, nicknamed "Perky," short for Perkins.

Each of the sections were then attached to the walls of the hallway, beginning at the art room, following through the hallway and back up to across from the art room to create a magnificent python.

The art project was a grand effort by students and staff alike, according to instructor Susan Hanson.
