The holiday season is quickly approaching and staying true to healthy eating is sometimes easier said than done. With extra temptations and numerous holiday parties even the most diligent healthful eater is likely to stray from their eating plan.

Here are five tips to battle the dreaded holiday weight gain.

Look at the whole buffet table before making your selections: Do you ever find yourself half way through the buffet line with an overflowing plate and a feeling of disappointment because you can't possibly fit one more thing on your plate? Sneak a peak at the whole buffet table before making selections. Fill half your plate with fresh fruits and vegetables leaving less room for high fat/calorie holiday foods.

Watch portions sizes: Watching portion sizes is a great way to ward off weight gain. If you like to taste test more than one dessert try taking small bite-size pieces of a couple desserts. This will keep the amount of calories down while still allowing you to satisfy that holiday sweet tooth.

Be aware of what you are drinking: Calories in beverages can quickly add up. If you are going to have eggnog have a small glass and then switch to a different low calorie beverage. Alcoholic beverages can also provide numerous calories that can add up quickly.

Eat a small healthy snack before the holiday event: Going to an all-you-can-eat buffet with a growling stomach is a recipe for overeating. Have a small healthy snack beforehand to ward off the impulse to overeat. Try yogurt and a piece of fruit or low fat string cheese and whole wheat crackers.

Modify recipes: If you are taking a dish to a party make a healthy version of a classic dish. Many people will be excited to try something healthy². You may even decide that the healthier version is preferred by many people. See the recipe below for an apple crisp instead of apple pie. (Recipe from: extension.org Quick and Healthy Recipes)

Don't forget to listen to your hunger cues. Ask yourself if you really are hungry or if it just really looks good. Remember, moderation is key. Happy Holidays!
