

Dear Editor:

Now that the weather has warmed up, more and more children are walking to and from school. One day last week, I noticed several vehicles drive through the crosswalk area, when there was a little person waiting to cross the highway.

The children are small, and harder to see than an adult. Which is exactly why we need to be extra vigilant.

Unfortunately, the intersection is no longer supervised by crossing guards.

Please proceed with caution before and after school hours when little ones may be wanting to cross the highway.
